CHARLOTTE.

Tuesday, July 7, 1863.

We have been requested by the committee appointed at the meeting held at the Court House yesterday, to notify all citizens who may have a spare shovel or spade to leave them at Kerr's Hotel, this day by 4 o'clock, to be sent forward for preparing defences where they are most needed.

It is important that all who can contribute should do so promptly, as the authorities deem it absolutely necessary to be prepared for the enemy.

FROM TENNESSEE.—The Chattanooga Rebel says that fifteen of Col. Hawkins' Mounted Scouts and eight of Wharton's men, crossed the Cumberland in seven miles of Nashville, near the city on the Gallatin pike, with a boldness that must have been bewildering, and routed a detachment of abolitionists engaged in guarding stolen stock. They brought off two hundred and twelve mules, and re-swam the river in safety, without loss. The mules belonged to Geo. D. Prentice of the Louisville Journal, and were intended for the Government.

On the 14th instant a detachment of Hawkins' scouts ambuscaded a party of Federals on the Lebanon pike, killing sixteen, capturing a number of horses and carbines, fifteen navies, some thirty splendid gunt blankets, and various "Yankee notions," among them ten negroes, who have been given up to their owners. Another squad of Hawkins' men, under scouting orders, to Gallatin met a party of dundrheaded Dutch and bravely attack them. They killed three. One of the bodies proved to be that of Lt. Col. Carter, regiment not known.

I was told yesterday that Vallandigham had said that it would be a bad move on our part to cross the Potomac, inasmuch as it would injure the peace party. The World and Herald say that the peace party is frustrated under the present excitement. —Correspondent Charleston Mercury.

Suppose Mr. Vallandigham and the New York papers did say so, it is very natural that a Northern man should depreciate invasion of his country, even though he may be on the side of peace. The quotations of such opinions were regarded as most ill-timed. Their tendency is to perpetuate the long since exploded foolery that we could build up a peace party at the North, an idea that lies at the bottom of half of our disasters in this war. It proceeds, too, on the idea that the invasion is destined to fail,—a despondent view which no Southern man should entertain for a moment.

The correct position, as we understand it is this: We should not attempt invasion unless we are prepared to carry it through successfully, or at least with a strong probability of success. The proper conclusion is that by punishing the North severely for its crimes, and overthrowing its armies—as we expect to do—we shall make more peace men at the North than we should by twenty years of forbearance or five hundred speeches from Vallandigham and Wood. It seems hard for our people to learn that there is but one road to peace—a thorough drubbing of the enemy. The sooner we plant ourselves on this ground, the sooner the war will be brought to a close. Northern Democracy and foreign intervention are foolish delusions which should no longer be allowed to deceive.

The New York Herald says that Abe Lincoln has promised to unite with the Union League of Philadelphia in their celebration of the 4th of July. What a happy little coincidence it would be if Gen. Ewell should happen in at the same time (merely in search of that leg, you know,) and join with Abe in the exercises of the occasion!

A FACT.—A correspondence from Mississippi, speaking of our operations in the rear of Grant's army, besieging Vicksburg, says: "Pemberton has provisions to last him months. Nobody is in a hurry." No, indeed, they are not; that is self-evident.

Army Correspondence.

CONCLUDED.

The commands were withdrawn farther back—Robinson's and Jones' to the skirts of Upperville, while Hampton moved straight across the plain and through the cornfield and wheeled his command at the far edge of this field preparatory to a charge from the enemy, who came dashing out of the wood and when fairly drawn out across the above named cornfield—the Jeff Davis Legion and 1st N. Carolina in front—Gen. Hampton's clear voice rang out "Charge them, my brave boys, charge them!" The whole line with drawn sabres set up the old accustomed yell and at them went, the boggy surface somewhat impeding our speed. The enemy met us with his pistol, popping like a fired canebrake; but a few well plied surges of the keen blade soon told who were masters of the field. His ranks began to break, pell mell they rolled from their horses, either from a blow inflicted or to save themselves of a decending one. The cry, "I'll surrender, I'll surrender," went up from the hindmost, and they were trotted to the rear. Their retreating body was hurled back to the wood from whence they had emerged from their intantry supports, who were strongly posted to relieve them in anticipation of such an emergency.

The command was ordered to retire back to our former position. Across the same ground another fresh column, in heavy numbers dashed, to punish our success. They were met again with sword in hand with the same happy results.—Back they went, howling, to their support in the woods, leaving the ground dotted with blue coats and another batch of prisoners were borne off. The brigade was formed again near the same ground for another onset, but his chivalrous riders seemed satisfied at this open game and moved his infantry up during the excitement of the charges along the stone fences on our left, while his artillery had taken position and was raking us with a most galling fire. Under the unfavorable circumstances our commands were withdrawn in good order, bearing off our wounded and all the prisoners.

In these charges on our part all the regiments of Hampton's Brigade participated and suffered severely; Robinson's Brigade also suffered severely, mostly in wounded. Col. Evans of the 5th was mortally wounded—a most gallant and daring officer. The other brigades of the Division did not suffer so much. We took our next position at Ashby's Gap. Though the enemy did not attempt to follow any farther.

Thus ended a hardly-contested and important battle. Hardly-contested because of the immensely superior numbers of the enemy, and inflicting a heavy loss upon him; and highly important, as it being a reconnaissance in force of the enemy to ascertain something of the position and movements of our army, so mystical to him at this particular time, which a few weeks will doubtless develop; all of which designs he was doubtless foiled in, as by the indomitable courage and desperate fighting of this command he was kept from the flanks of our army, the movements of which is now of the most important character and fraught with mightier results than any other period of the war; and may Heaven grant the results in our favor.

A part of our forces are in Maryland and Pennsylvania, and our pontoons now span the waters of the upper Potomac. The rippling waters of this classic river now mingle its quiet murmurings with the war songs of our cheerful soldiery, going forward to avenge their ruined and outraged homes behind—to strike for freedom on the foeman's soil. D. B. R.

P. S.—For the information of the friends interested in Co. C, we will append a list of the killed and wounded: Killed—Wm. Wallace and Thos E. Barnett. Wounded—James J. Orr, slightly, with shell in the thigh; Eli Tomberlin, slightly, with shell in the leg; Robert Finely, severely, with nine sabre cuts, five on the head and four on the body; Lieut. Wm. B. Fields, severely, concussion from the fall of his horse, being shot from under him. D. B. R.

News from Memphis.

PANOLA, June 30.—The Memphis Bulletin, of the 21st, reports that Capt. Robin Barrow, of Richardson's Partisans, has escaped.

One hundred refugees, principally women and children, left Memphis on the 20th.

Gamble has resigned the Governorship of Missouri to the State Convention now in session.

Business is dull. Frank Kerr's battery has sunk two transports and crippled several others on the Mississippi.

Interest from Vicksburg.

The special correspondent of the Selma Dispatch, writing from Canton, Miss., on the 24th, communicates to that paper interesting intelligence from Vicksburg as late as the 16th inst. We transfer the letter to our columns:

At Gen. Johnston's headquarters yesterday, I had a 10/10 interview with a Texas scout. Being intelligent, shrewd, and perfectly familiar with the topography of Vicksburg and vicinity, his conversation was highly interesting. A part of his discourse I transfer to this letter. Entrusted with important dispatches by the highest officials, his statements are certainly entitled to credence. He left Vicksburg on the 16th ultimo, and after five days of incredible hardships reached this place with direct intelligence from Pemberton. Two others started with him, but were captured, or killed by the Yankees, and he barely escaped with life. Before he left, the Yankees had made time distinct assaults upon our breastworks. The slaughter was without a parallel in this war. In one heap he counted fifteen dead Yankees: He saw one hundred and twenty men lying lifeless in a space of not more than thirty feet square. The Yankees always charged in columns sixteen men deep, and it was almost impossible to miss them, unless some fool fired his gun in the air. From observations and calculations made on the ground after the ninth attack, he was convinced that the enemy killed was fifteen thousand. A part of the Yankee wounded lay for five days, bleeding, groaning and festering in the hot sun, without anyone to give them so much as a drink of water. At last ambition bowed her haughty crest, and humanity asserted her prerogative. The flag of truce had to come. The vandals were not allowed to approach nearer than forty yards of our entrenchments. All the Yankee dead within that distance were carried out to the burying party by negroes and some of our forces, who had acted badly in the recent engagements. At the head of a deep ravine, not very far from our lines, the diggers and miners commenced their steady operations directly after the investment of the "Hill City." In due season a whole legion of skeletons and captured the whole pack of underminers, and also took a large quantity of ammunition, stored away in the excavation. He stated, moreover, that our boys got as many cartridge boxes, well filled, and as many line of lead as they wanted from their slain enemies. There is no lack of ammunition in Vicksburg, for our men are generally fighting the Abolitionists with their own powder and ball, obtained as above stated. The commissary store in the beleagured city are amply sufficient to furnish the whole garrison with full rations during the next sixty days. All the scouts and officers that come out from Vicksburg confirm his statement. Than this Texas scout I never saw a man more buoyant and full of hope. In fact there is a number of us about this place who believe that Pemberton and his men can whip Grant without any help from Johnston.—Glorious Vicksburg! Her siege and heroic resistance will be the most brilliant page in our history.

Yesterday and today I saw some light artillery companies that seemed to be complete in all their appointments. They come from —, and went towards Vicksburg. The officers were mounted on the finest chargers I ever saw. I have also noticed the streets here almost blocked up with wagons laden with meal and bacon. All go towards Gen. Grant's centre.—This very morning six wagons were seen at the depot in this town, full of the knapsacks and surplus clothing sent from General Walker's division. This looks like active operations—or rather like stripping for the fight.

I saw Gen. Johnston this afternoon for the first time. He is looking remarkably well. His headquarters are still at Canton. The wheat crop in the counties above this are most excellent. The corn crop gives promise of an abundant yield. The weather continues showery, with pleasant breezes.

GRAND GULF.—The Mississippi, of the 24th ult., learns that the enemy have abandoned Grand Gulf. A gunboat, however, remains opposite the place, but all the land is free, and everything belonging to the army has been carried over the river. Not less than ten thousand slaves, two thousand mules and horses, and many hundreds of wagons have been stolen from Claiborne county and carried off. Very many of the fine places are destitute of any means of securing the growing crops, and they will be lost. All have suffered—some are ruined.

The Scourge at hand—a Fierce Denunciation.

The New York Freeman's Journal has the following bitter denunciation of the Federal Government:

The imbedded and wicked Federal administration is drifting without rudder and without compass. It knows neither where it is, nor whither driven. We can well believe that the ungainly and vacant countenance of Lincoln, as it is reported, is frequently overcast with a vague sense of terror and renders him incapable for a time of speech or motion.

The truculent incapables that surround him are seeking to illustrate by a new example the old adage: Improbi ne pereant perdunt. "The wicked destroy others that themselves may escape." They are fools in this as in all they have hitherto attempted.

And those cowardly and incapable things—Lincoln, Seward, Staunton—have imagined that this fierce fighting American race, rained to liberty even in its excess, will bow their heads beneath the trembling paws of these creatures, and quietly lay on the ground the "symbols of the free"—the arms that the Constitution of the land guarantee to them to keep and bear, "for the protection of themselves and of the State."

Every revolver you take from these people is replaced by a rifle and bayonet! Every old shot gun you steal from them is good for a dozen regulation muskets, with ammunition to match. You think you have a trophy when you have seized a rifle; you will find, as it had dropped down from the clouds, or as if the earth had yawned to let it forth a well furnished mountain howitzer, making good the loss of the rifle!

Hunt the brush, and you will not find them! Burn barns, and you will not destroy them! Exhaust your suspicious and narrow brains, and you will be no nearer the mark. But we tell you—not by political forecast, but as the chronicler of what is ready to become an accomplished fact—that, if the freedom of the ballot box be interfered with in the Northwestern States, or if the free canvass necessary to a free election be further interrupted there, the irreparable blow will fall. As if the heavens dropped it down from above, and the earth budded it forth, from the four winds of heaven the entire Northwest will be in one blaze of armed array. By your attempts at suppressing speech and the Democratic press you have forced men to action instead of words. You have to deal in the Northwest, with the kind of men who took Fort Donelson for you. Against them what can avail our weeping "Wide Awakes," transformed into "Union Leagues?"

We want peace and order here at the North. In order to have it, we must have peace with the South. If we have it not, we tell moneyed men, even those who are making profit by the war, that their gain will turn to loss. Their sweet things will become bitter. Their fancied security will vanish. The scourge is at hand. When it comes—it is not stayed by wisdom and consideration—we will see who will howl loudest, the men who will not believe us now, or we.

Edward William Johnston.

In the list of names of persons expelled by the Yankee Despotism from St. Louis, is that of Edward William Johnston. It appears that though ordered away, he was allowed a few days time to prepare. Mr. Johnston is a brother of General Joseph E. Johnston, and is well known in Virginia and the South. He was the popular party letter writer under the name of "Ill Segetario," and has been connected with the press here and in other Southern cities. He is a gentleman of extensive literary acquirements, and one of the most pungent writers for the press of his day. He is now an old man, and has for some years resided in St. Louis, where he was Librarian of the large Commercial or Mercantile Library of that city. The Federal officials have been assiduous in their attentions to him. They have frequently presented the oath to him; but he spurned it as an intolerably bitter draft of medicine, with excretion. Finally being ordered to swallow it or depart from St. Louis, he chose the latter alternative, and we suppose he will return to Virginia, his native State.—Richmond Dispatch.

Mr. Johnston was for some years librarian and tutor of the South Carolina College, and was author or one of the authors of the "Memoirs of a Nullifier," a political brochure of the Nullification era, and also one of the editors of the Telescope of Columbia, S. C., afterwards conducted by his brother, the late A. Sidney Johnston, of Columbia, S. C.—Charleston Courier.

What the Canals and Railroads are Suffering.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, writing from Frederick, Md., on the 24th, speaking of the damage done by the Confederate forces to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, says:

The aqueduct on the canal at Williamsport has been blown up, the locks destroyed, and all the boats in the vicinity burned. At Green Spring the embankment was broken, and the water running out of the canal into the fields. He corroborated the statement of the other refugee that the canal was a perfect wreck from Williamsport to Cumberland, Md.

The rebels have burned about three hundred canal boats on the Baltimore and Ohio canal. They paroled the boatmen and drivers not to divulge any of their movements, and then released them after taking possession of the horses employed in towing the boats.

All the bridges on the railroad between the Okequon and Cumberland have been destroyed, track torn up in many places, and water tanks buried and demolished. At the North Branch bridge, over the Potomac, they fired seventeen shots from a 12 pounder before they could break the top cord, the bridge being an iron one and a very fine structure. Only one span of the bridge was destroyed. The bridge over the South Branch was destroyed entirely.

The bridges over Black Creek, Sleepy Creek, Sir John's Run, and Green Spring Run, were all burned, and the water tanks at Green Spring Run and Sir John's Run were both burned. The devastation has been extensive and complete.

The same correspondent saw droves of fat cattle driven South through Martinsburg, and large numbers of horses, the fruits of plunder in Western Maryland and Pennsylvania.

Removal of Gen. Hooker.

Fighting Joe Hooker, commander of the Grand Army of the Potomac, has been removed. He is superseded by Gen. Meade one of his old corps commanders.

A despatch from Washington to the Herald, dated the 29th, says the main reason for the removal of Hooker, was a radical difference of opinion between him and Gen. Halleck as to the value of Maryland Heights as a military position during the present active operations.

Hooker was the sixth commander of the Army of the Potomac.

FROM MISSISSIPPI.

NATCHEZ, July 4.

Col. Smith of Grant's staff on the Arizona, accompanied by the Allen gunboat, came down last evening and anchored off Natchez and communicated with the Mayor, threatening to burn the town because Government stores and cattle crossed here. The Mayor replied that he had no control of transportation. Smith said he came to dictate terms, not to discuss, and would burn the town if transportation did not cease that hour. He threatened to shell Vidalia because Texans swore they would cross cattle where they pleased. The gunboats left All quiet.

A gentleman from Woodville reports heavy fighting at Port Hudson on Saturday and Sunday last.

Deserters state that the fight was more desperate and the Federal loss heavier than ever before.

On the morning of the 2nd Logan's cavalry attacked the Federals, six miles below Port Hudson on the Mississippi. They burned a large amount of commissary and quartermaster's stores, wounding 150 and capturing 40 prisoners. Among the captured is a Colonel, Major, Captain and Quartermaster. They also destroyed one hundred and fifty thousand rations, half a million of dollars in greenbacks, seventy-five wagons and shot three hundred mules.
